Farrukh Moriani

Farrukh Moriani is a student of public policy and public and private sector governance. Having done his MSc.in Development Management from the London School of Economics and Political Science and an MBA (Marketing major) from the IBA Karachi, Farrukh has a diverse work experience that straddles the public, private, non-profit sectors. He has worked in eight countries, advising governments on governance, public finance, and institutional reforms, as well as on private sector development for over 22 years. Having started off as a Creative Head in Saatchi & Saatchi/IAL, Farrukh has gone on to serve in senior positions in the civil service of Pakistan at all tiers of government, including as Secretary to the Federal Ombudsman, Director at the State Bank of Pakistan and Chief of Foreign Aid in Sindh. He has extensive experience of working with major development partners, regional bodies and international consulting firms in key assignments, including as Governance Advisor for South Asia in ADB, ADB Team Leader for the $625m Devolved Social Services Programs, UN Advisor for the Global Compact and Advisor to the President of the Asian Ombudsman Association. With technical expertise in decentralisation, public finance, social sector reforms, accountability and private sector development and CSR, as well as extensive experience in program design, evaluation, management, multistakeholder engagement and senior level policy advocacy, Farrukh brings a set of skills that range from policy level macro strategy development to a solid understanding of implementation challenges and possible solutions. His work has been published both as standalone publications and as part of edited volumes.